

Summary

Research dealing with the quality of pasture grasses is facilitated by the use of fistular cannulas inserted into the bovine's rumen. Different kinds of cannulas have been developed. One of them is described as well as methods for its use. Its advantages are that it divides the surgical process into aseptic and septic phases and it offers better support to the cannule on a 3 cm cicatrization edge.